Wall Street Penmanship.

Wall street Penmanship.

Wall street has had a recent lesson in penmanship. Brokers are not necessarily legible with pens, if they do have unmistakable voices. The failure of a Wall street firm has just been attributed to the fact that an order to a broker to soil certain stock "quietly" was, owing to illegible penmanship, read "quiekly," which alarmed other houses, and precipitated a rush on the house giving the order, resulting in its suspension. Had the order been written with a Reminsten trype writer the intanke could not have occurred.

The bill pending in the senate to grant the right of way to the Chmahar and Clark's Fork Balirond company through the northern border of the Yellowstone park is one of great merit, and should be passed without delay. The bill proposes no subsidy, and if passed will afford an outlet to 'a portlent of Montana and Wyoming territories which is now wholly cat off from all rathroad facilities.

The Clark's Fork inding district alone contains several hundred registered mining claims, and has several thousand inhabitants. It is rich in after and gold ledes, which are almost undeveloped. Two smelters are in operation, and many rich lodes are being worked; but transportation costs, both in and our of the direct, from 4 to 8 cents a pound, and thus practically shuts off the most valuable portlon of these territories from development. The government will not build a road there, and no others can do so without its consent. It is wholly unwarrantable to deprive the enterprising cilizons of that region of the power to help themselves, when the government either caunot or will not do the work.

The route proposed for this road has been reported upon by the committees on railways of both the senate and house to be the only one passible of our railon. All other routes would necessarily cases hodinian ranges that are covered with snow the greater part of the year, and entirely impracticable to build or operate.
